

- ▶ Are you concerned about preserving New Zealand's unique flora, fauna and habitats?
- ▶ Do you want to help prevent invasive organisms damaging our environment?
- ▶ Are you interested in protecting our primary industries from introduced pests?

Then join the New Zealand Biosecurity Institute.

- ▶ It has people from all walks of life who deal with New Zealand's biosecurity issues. They include members of conservation groups, biosecurity staff from regional councils and government departments, pest control contractors, scientists from Crown Research Institutes, researchers from universities and staff from pest control companies.
- ▶ Membership of the New Zealand Biosecurity Institute is open to anyone with an interest in the Biosecurity field. Annual membership fees are very modest – currently NZ$60 per year.

Reasons for joining NZBI

- ▶ Attend the mid-year conference – make new friends, catch up with old friends, enjoy a fascinating range of presentations, celebrate biosecurity successes and achievements, learn about future challenges and as a member enjoy discounted conference fees.
- ▶ Attend local branch meetings – get to know local members involved in biosecurity and participate in local field trips and other activities.
- ▶ Catch up on biosecurity developments from around NZ in the NZBI magazine Protect, published four times per year.
- ▶ Learn from others in the Institute how to help protect New Zealand's unique flora, fauna and habitats.
 - Help others by passing on your knowledge and experience.
 - Get involved in local and national NZBI projects.
- ▶ Access the members section of the website, abstracts of recent NETS conferences, the members forum, useful reports and current issues of Protect.
